- Jun 04 Co-convenor of an interdisciplinary conference called ‘Trees, Rain and Politics in Africa’ examining issues of environmental change and environmental politics. by more than 100 people, with more than 30 speakers from overseas.

Long Term Research Visits

Much of my work on rural livelihoods, development, conservation and governance hinges on long term and in depth studies, participant observation and interviews. That record comprises.

- Jul 12 – Aug 13 Sabbatical research in Hanang, Tanzania. I undertook research on microfinance and long-term livelihood change.
- Jan 08 – Mar 08 ESRC-funded fellowship in India. This was part of a research fellowship exploring relationships between conservation and livelihoods.
- Oct 06 – Dec 06 ESRC-funded fellowship in the Southern Alps, Australia. This was part of a research fellowship exploring relationships between conservation and livelihoods.
- Jan 07 – May 07 ESRC-funded fellowship in New Zealand. This was part of a research fellowship exploring relationships between conservation and livelihoods.
- Jan 05 – Mar 05 Oppenheimer-funded work in Grahamstown on conservation and livelihoods.
- Aug 99 – Oct 00 British Academy funded post-doctoral research in Rukwa, Tanzania. I examined change to livelihoods and natural resource governance.
- Jan 95 – Dec 96 ODA funded research on conservation and livelihood change in north-east Tanzania.

Teaching

I have established with colleagues a website which brings environmental film into the classroom. We took an extraordinary, multi-award winning film ‘Green’ and set up a website which made the film physically accessible and intellectually appealing to educators by writing a series of brief essays, together with a response from the filmmaker, to facilitate its use in the classroom. The site is www.studyinggreen.wordpress.com

University of Manchester – courses taught

- 2014-15 ‘Representations in Development’ for Masters in International Development.
‘Development Research’ for Masters in International Development.
‘Social Development Fieldwork’ (in Uganda) for Masters in International Development.
- 2013-14 ‘Representations in Development’ for Masters in International Development.
‘Conservation and Development’ for Masters in International Development.
‘Development Research’ for Masters in International Development.
‘Social Development Fieldwork’ (in Uganda) for Masters in International Development.
- 2011-12 ‘Representations in Development’ for Masters in International Development.
- 2009-10 ‘Conservation and Development’ for Masters in International Development.
- 2008-9 ‘Conservation and Development’ for the Masters in International Development ‘Development Research’ for the Masters in International Development.
The Fieldwork trip to Uganda.
- 2007-8 ‘Conservation and Development’ for Masters in International Development.
(Recommended for a teaching award)
- 2005-6 ‘Environment and Development’ for Masters in International Development.

Rhodes University – courses taught

- 2005 Designed and delivered a course on ‘Social and Economic Aspects of Complex Systems’ to second year undergraduates.

University of Oxford – courses taught

- 2003-5 ‘Communities, Conservation and Development’. MSc in Biodiversity Conservation.
- 2002-5 ‘Environmental Policy’. Masters in Nature, Society and Environmental Policy.

University of Cambridge – courses taught

- 2000-2 I convened a series of lectures and tutorials about pastoral societies for the Geography of Africa, a third year undergraduate option.

I have presented a précis of student evaluations of my masters teaching at Manchester below. The table below shows the percentage agreeing (A), or mostly agreeing (B) my teaching was excellent.

Course	Year	A	B	Respondents
Dev Research	14-15	70	21	60
Representations	14-15	88	8	25
Fieldwork	14-15	100	-	18
Cons and Dev	13-14	100	-	5
Representations	13-14	100	-	7
Dev Research	13-14	71	24	38
Representations	11-12	71	29	9
Cons and Dev	09-10	87	13	30
Cons and Dev	08-09	89	5	18
Dev Research	08-09	16	68	74
Cons and Dev	07-08	91	9	22

Knowledge Transfer and Impact

I enjoy the challenges of the ‘impact agenda’ facing academia. I have found that I am able to build in stakeholder engagement in my work by constructing bespoke websites to share results and questions and to promote discussion of them. The technology for this is free and straightforward (I simply use a wordpress blog and turn off the blogging and comments function). But the results have been rewarding and we are using this same technique in the current DfID/ESRC funded projects.

I have had a number of engagements with media interested in reporting on my work. I was both an advisor and one of a panel of experts and voices interviewed for three documentaries about conservation. The best of these were the film ‘A Place without People’ (<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QrEmUjNhwyo>), and ‘Unnatural Histories: the Serengeti’ (BBC4 June 2011). I was also interviewed for ‘Conservation’s Dirty Secrets (Channel 4 June 2011).

With respect to my work on celebrity I have received numerous invitations to brief journalists, talk on radio and write pieces for different outlets in numerous countries and international news outlets. The full list of these newspaper reports and blogs is available on the project website. They include articles in the Independent, New York Times, Observer, Guardian Weekly and Daily Mail. There are also a number of blogs covering the work I have been interviewed for ABC Radio in Australia and ‘Science for the People’ based in Edmonton, Canada, with additional requests from BBC Scotland, KCBS (California) and LBC Radio

One particularly interesting area of work has been efforts to encourage the larger conservation NGOs to form a self-policed code of practice with respect to human rights. This work is being led by Nick Winer who has been an honorary Research Fellow at the University of Manchester. The longer term project of which this is part is that the conservation community needs to see its activities as part of a broader set of interventions, which includes Development policy, and to which the same standards and principles apply. Currently we can have ridiculous situations whereby eviction of people to create dams and development projects requires elaborate protocols and procedures to ensure as little harm is done to evictees as possible, yet eviction for conservation requires no such measures. We want to encourage NGOs to form a set of best practice principles by which they will police their own community to discourage some of the abuses we have observed elsewhere. We have set up the ‘Just Conservation’ website to facilitate information sharing about this issue (www.justconservation.org).

The other channel for my engagement with conservation NGOs is as a board member and advisor. I serve on the board of Micaia, a rapidly growing NGO working in Mozambique, on environmental issues and rural development. I also serve on the board of Dakshin, a similar, but smaller outfit based in India, and as an advisor to CREE a US based funder.
